

Fall tracing lines

Take the chestnut to the basket, the hedgehog to the mushroom, the leaf to the puddle and the umbrella home. Start at the brown dot and follow the gray path.

Tip for parents: Let the child trace each path with a finger first and say who is going where. Then the crayon. Leaving the path is fine – what matters is getting all the way to the picture at the end.

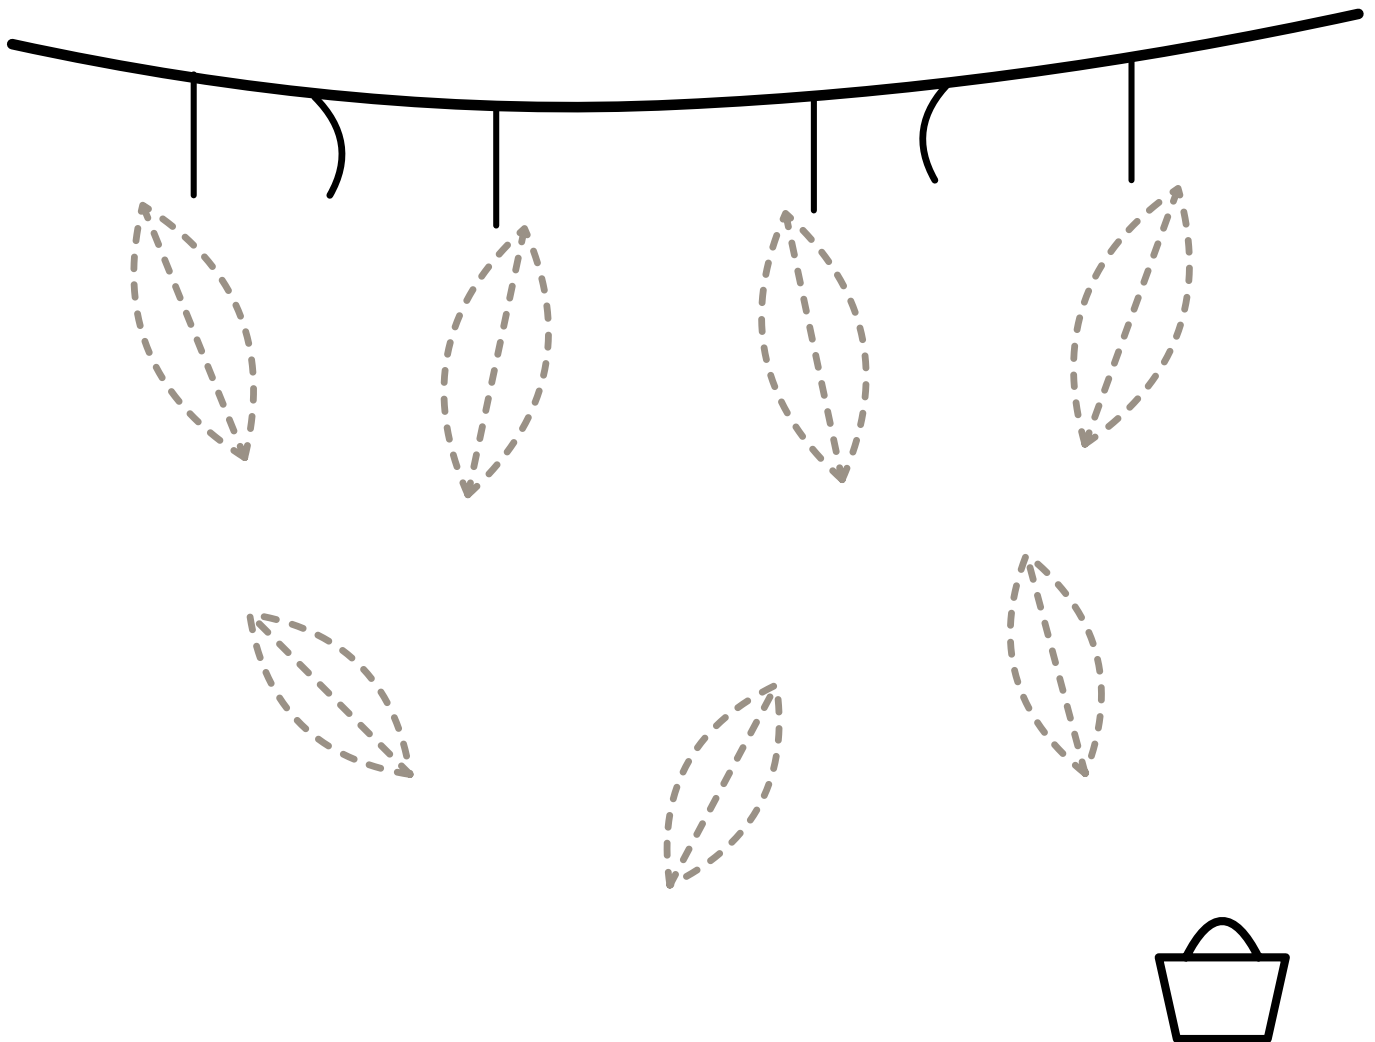

Trace the autumn leaves

Trace the leaves on the branch and the vein inside each one. Then color them and draw more leaves falling down.

Trace the leaves and then color them in.

Tip for parents: Show the movement in the air first: “up from the stem to the tip, and back down the other side”. It’s fine if a leaf isn’t symmetrical. Leave the coloring for another time if attention runs out.

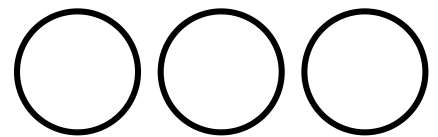

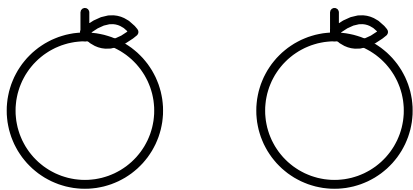

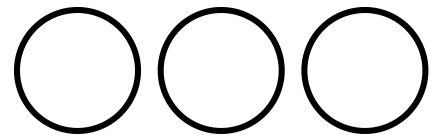

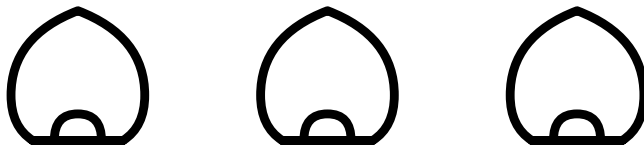

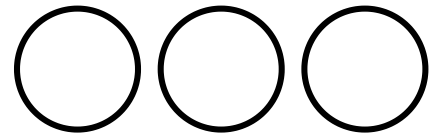

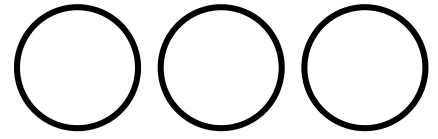

Fall counting to 3

Count the pictures in the box. Color as many circles as there are pictures.

Tip for parents: Count out loud and stop a finger on each picture. Instead of a crayon you can put real acorns from a walk on the circles – it's about the number, not the coloring.

Fall matching pairs

In every row two pictures are the same. Find them and circle them. Then color them the same color.

Tip for parents: Cover the rows you aren't working on with a piece of paper. Let the child name the pictures – chestnut, acorn and pine cone are easy to mix up, and vocabulary comes along for free.
